POISONED WHISKEY CAUSE OF DEATH

Coroner's Jury, Investigating
Danville Tragedy, Has Arrived at This Verdict.

POLICE LOOK FOR MOORE

He is Husband of One of Women
Found Dead—Motive Ascribed to Him.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
DANVILLE, VA., April 25.—The coroner's jury investigating the tragedy enacted in the servant's room at the residence of Rev. W. H. Atwill, a well-known Methodist presiding elder, where the dead bodies of three negroes and the unconscious form of another, who later died, were found, met this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The jury returned a verdict that the dead negroes, John Daniels, Ada Moore, Will Spraggins and Lillie McCain, came to their death from drinking corn whiskey, which had been poisoned by unknown parties.

Cocaine Poisoning.
In the room where the gruesome discovery was made was discovered a pint bottle, which contained some whiskey, which was analyzed by City Physician Julian Robinson and Dr. Howe Miller. The beverage showed traces of cocaine poison. The autopsy performed on the stomach of John Daniels, one of the victims, also showed traces of cocaine poisoning.

The police are still on the lookout for George Moore, alias Sam Moore, the husband of Ada Moore, who is suspected of having furnished the whiskey for the frolic Tuesday night.

The story among the negroes acquainted with the parties is that Moore, upon returning to the city a few days ago, set about for the purpose of getting revenge by killing his wife and John Daniels. He has not been seen since last Monday night, and all efforts to locate him have proved futile.

HOUSE BLOWN AWAY; NONE HURT

Four-Room Dwelling Carried
Some Distance, but Little Occupants Escape Harm.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
RICE DEPOT, VA., April 25.—A terrific windstorm struck the northeastern part of the Prince Edward county, about six miles from this place, late Tuesday afternoon, carrying destruction in its pathway. Buildings were blown down and in some instances carried entirely away. Trees were uprooted and borne on the wings of the wind like so many feathers. At Overby a four-room dwelling was lifted up bodily and taken some distance. Four little children were alone in the house, but in some miraculous way were blown down and after the storm was over. A large barn, filled with tobacco, was blown down on the farm of Professor J. X. Morton. Every building on the farm of Mr. R. A. Johns was blown down, except the dwelling. Some houses had doors and blinds wrenched off and carried away. The direction of the storm was from southwest to northeast. The width of its pathway was only about one-fourth of a mile. The region over which it passed looks as if a reaper had cut its way along, leveling houses, trees, etc., like so many straws.

Major William N. Berkeley's
Long and Honored Career

FOUR BROTHERS WON FAME

"Berkeley Regiment's" Record
Unparalleled in History—General
Huntton's Tribute.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA., April 25.—Major William N. Berkeley, aged eighty, died at the University of Virginia to-day, after a long illness. He was a native of Loudoun county, and with his five brothers served through the Civil War, attaining the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Three daughters survive—Misses Cynthia, Edmonds and Fannie Berkeley. The funeral will take place to-morrow at Middletown, Va.

General Eppa Huntton, who was the first commander of the Eighth Virginia Regiment, was yesterday afternoon shown a telegram announcing Major Berkeley's death. The general was greatly grieved to hear of the end of the life of his friend and brother soldier. His clear mind immediately commenced to dwell upon war times and war scenes, and from him it was learned that Major Berkeley was a native of Loudoun county, and at the beginning of the War Between the States he owned and occupied the splendid estate, "Aldie," in Loudoun county. Major Berkeley was a member of the Confederate service, it being attached to the Eighth Regiment, of which General Huntton became colonel.

Four Martial Brothers.

These four brothers fought through the whole war, and at its close they ranked as follows: Colonel Norborne Berkeley; Lieutenant Colonel Edmund Berkeley; Major William N. Berkeley; Senior Captain, Charles Berkeley. All four of them were in the battle of Gettysburg, and were wounded. The three other brothers were captured, but Edmund and General Huntton were immediately released. "Impressing" a buggy to which was hitched General Huntton's horse, made their escape to the Confederate lines. The three other Berkeleys remained in prison a few weeks, when they were exchanged, and without even making a call at home, they rejoined their regiment.

After the battle of Gettysburg, General Huntton was promoted and became commander of Armstrong's Brigade, and Norborne Berkeley succeeded him as colonel of the old Eighth Virginia. At the same time, Edmund Berkeley became lieutenant-colonel, while Charles became major, and Charles took the latter's place as senior captain. From that time to the close of the war, the four brothers were known among the soldiers as the "Berkeley Regiment."

Heroic Record on Heights.

The Loudoun company, that was raised for the war by the Berkeleys, went into the battle of Gettysburg with exactly 100 men in line, and carried out with only ten men, ninety being killed or wounded, every officer, including all four of the Berkeleys, having been shot down.

In speaking of the Berkeleys last night, General Huntton said: "They were indeed four of nature's heroes, brave, generous, and noble. Previous to the war Major William Berkeley was a magistrate in his county and was one of the best men in the State. He dispensed the old-time hospitality at his splendid home and always stood deservedly high in the estimation of all his friends and acquaintances. He was no trouble for the Berkeleys to raise a good company from among their countrymen. They were the kind of men that other boys would follow."

Service at Ball's Bluff.

General Huntton said he could relate many incidents to prove the true bravery and daring of Major "Billy" Berkeley. "But," said he, "one will suffice: After the famous battle of Ball's Bluff, on the old Eighth greatly distinguished himself by meeting and driving a force of Yankees, greatly superior in numbers, down the river, and the river's edge. Billy Berkeley and Colonel Lige White organized a force of volunteers and went to the river's edge, where the Yankees were, and made a strenuous effort to reach the Maryland side of the river. The Yankees were taken by surprise and routed and demoralized, and between three and four hundred of them captured, and the next morning sent as prisoners of war to General Beauregard at Centerville.

"The Eighth had been fighting all day long and was literally tired out, and so when it was proposed to attack the enemy after dark at the river's edge, Colonel Tibbs, who was in temporary command during my absence, refused to order the men out, but said if any one volunteered they could go. Billy Berkeley and Lige White called for volunteers, and a sufficient number responded, and the raid was made under their command, with the result I have related."

Gave His Horses Freely.

Speaking further of Major Berkeley's generous loyalty, General Huntton said that he took the horses from his plantation to lend to the officers who could not otherwise provide themselves with mounts, and that he gave no less than thirty officers of the brigade were riding horses that had been loaned them by Major Berkeley.

Major Berkeley and his three brothers fought the war out to Appomattox, and then returned home to find their estates in ashes and in weeds. Some fifteen years ago Major Berkeley returned to Charlottesville to reside with his daughters at the University. The announcement of his death will bring a sad note to the eye of many old Confederates who knew him and loved him in the times that tried men's souls.

MINERAL, VA., April 25.—Dr. Harold James Van Deusen, who died at 10 o'clock Wednesday, at the home of his parents, Steven and Louisa Otis Van Deusen, Butler, Ind., of general consumption, was well known in this section, where he resided for nearly two years in the home of Mrs. W. H. Adams and later, and where he married their only daughter, Grace Curtis, June 4, 1900.

Dr. Van Deusen was a native of New York city, where he could proudly claim a direct relationship with some of the oldest and finest families in the State, but his family moved to Indiana some years ago and have called it home ever since. The doctor has been an extensive traveler, graduated with the highest honors from all the schools he attended, and lastly took up his abode in this section, where he followed surgery and medicine. Two years ago Dr. Van Deusen was obliged to give up his hospital work in Chicago and sought the Virginia climate for his health, but the dreaded disease had gotten too great a hold, and it was deemed best to have him cared for in the sanatorium at Mineral, where he was taken to his home, where he has remained until his request to be taken home. The Sign of the Cross drugstore at Mineral was owned and run by him, and is now owned by his wife. The doctor leaves, besides his parents and wife, two brothers, Mr. William and Elton Van Deusen, and two sisters, Mrs. Campbell and Miss Van Deusen, to mourn their loss. The funeral will be held at the home of his parents to-morrow, and the cremation ceremony will be under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, of whom the doctor has long been a prominent member.

The doctor left his widow all his property, both personal and real, and a life insurance.
